

Five words sum up Sandy Schildt's passion and life's work:

Better Health Care For Indians

Sandy Schildt, a Blackfeet Tribal member, is a Certified Indian Health Care Trainer and Consultant. She is a mother of two boys (Jefferson 21 & Jared 14). Sandy was born in Browning, MT, to Patrick "Sam" Schildt, Sr. (Korean War Veteran), Sr., and Violet (Retired IHS Service Unit Director).

"Health care is not up to par in Indian Country," says Sandy. "But I absolutely believe that, starting right here on the Blackfeet Reservation, we can dramatically improve Indian Health Care that can serve as a model and roadmap for Indian and non-Indian organizations alike, country wide. It starts with reducing waste, inefficiencies, and counter-productive practices embedded in IHS."
